'Fearless Girl' statue invades London

1 "Fearless Girl," by sculptor Kristen Visbal, is displayed in London. The statue, which has also been referred to as the Defiant Girl statue, originally situated on Wall Street in 2017, facing down the Charging Bull statue, has been installed in London to mark International Women's Day.

Alex Trebek diagnosed with pancreatic cancer

2 "Jeopardy!" host Alex Trebek has been diagnosed with Stage IV pancreatic cancer, he said in a video message on Wednesday, vowing to beat the disease despite its low survival rate. The Canadian-born Trebek has hosted the syndicated game show since 1984, making him one of the most recognizable figures on television in North America. Trebek, 78, said in a video message posted to YouTube that he was diagnosed with pancreatic cancer earlier this week. "Now normally, the prognosis for this is not very encouraging, but I'm going to fight this, and I'm going to keep working," Trebek said. "And with the love and support of my family and friends and with the help of your prayers also, I plan to beat the low survival rate statistics for this disease." Stage IV typically means the cancer has spread to other parts of the body.

Wright suspended 80 games for PED violation

3 Red Sox right-hander Steven Wright was suspended 80 games without pay after testing positive for a performance-enhancing substance, Major League Baseball announced Wednesday. Wright tested positive for Growth Hormone Releasing Peptide 2 (GHRP-2), according to the league, a violation of MLB's Joint Drug Prevention and Treatment Program. The suspension starts with the beginning of the regular season. "The Boston Red Sox fully support Major League Baseball's Joint Drug Prevention and Treatment Program and its efforts to eliminate performance-enhancing substances from the game," the team wrote in a statement. "While we are disappointed by the news of this violation, we will look to provide the appropriate support to Steven at this time. Going forward, the club will not comment further on the matter."

How to be a millennial mom

A new reality does not require you to be a perfect mother. Metro investigates why.

LUZ LANCHEROS
letters@metro.us

Year 1964: "Betty" Draper (played by January Jones) from American period-drama television series "Mad Men" has two perfect children who end up angry about all that "perfection." She lives in a beautiful house and has a husband who cheats on her.

Year 2016: Amy Mitchell (Mila Kunis) from "Bad Moms," the American comedy film directed and written by Jon Lucas and Scott Moore, gets tired of being that perfect, rebels against asphyxiating standards, finds herself and develops healthier relationships with children. But there is no need for so much alcohol and crazy friends to do it: In the middle of an era when old standards still predominate, there are real mothers who create their own rules.

Child psychologist Carolina Molina O., who has a YouTube channel and started a hashtag #yosoyunamamamillennial ("I am a millennial mother"), has recently released a book titled "Guide for a Millennial Mom." Metro spoke with Molina to learn more.

What does "being a good mother" mean when there are so many perfect moms on Instagram?
Being a good mother is something subjective. For me, it might mean staying at home, but for someone else it is to work and support children. For others, it is not being a mother, because they feel not prepared. I love that millennial women allow themselves to make mistakes, to learn from them, to be real. This concept has been defined on social media and makes it clear that we are real, imperfect and that we have a great responsibility: to balance all our roles.

Many people openly admit that they cannot stand children. There are also child-free places...
There is a lack of empathy toward children. We are living in an adult-centred world. For example, I was in a large Catholic church in Paris with my year-and-a-half-old baby. She was excited because she loved one of the sculptures. And those working there made us leave. So, there is no empathy toward children and we have to put ourselves in their place.

But there are also mothers who take their children to film performances at 9 p.m.
Sure, that's another extreme. But you have to let children be children. When I travel with my daughter, I mix plans. I could not take her to a museum, or to a park to throw myself in the sand with her.

What about "tyrant children"? Experts say there are more of those than ever.
We must try to find a balance between the authoritarianism of before and now. Modern parents tend to be much easier to persuade. For example, I must make my daughter comply with certain limits so that she grows up as a social being. But it all should be taught with respect and love.

Also, people show that pregnancy and motherhood are wonderful.
Every mom and every blogger shows their own reality. That should be respected, because everyone sees the world differently. What all mothers agree, though, that it is complex. It is a big responsibility and that is why we must be prepared. It is a matter of investment, time, attention. Being a mother is not easy.

What is it like to be a mother in the digital era?
Find channels and influencers that you relate to, then search for reliable information.

What about "tiger mothers," who have starred in articles and controversial books?
That style of parenting generates obedient children, but out of terror. Do you want your children to obey you out of fear, or out of conviction? I disagree with those methods.

Another fear are memes and challenges. Parents usually blame technology regarding that.
The fault is not of a Peppa Pig. There are articles that cite supposed studies that do not exist where they blame the character for inciting children to behave badly. The fault is of parents who let their children see this kind of program alone and who believe there is an educational substitute in them. But this is a four-hand job. Now we know what happens with some videos of Peppa Pig and what happens on YouTube: they put a monster called "Momo" that leads children to suicidal tendencies. That's why parents must be present. Being a parent does not have an instruction manual. But we are the ones who must accompany and put limits on the use of ICTs (information and communications technology). Children are born in a digital world, and we cannot separate them from their way of communicating. But we can teach them to use it responsibly.

Amazing art forms a long trail

Silos are not only used to store huge quantities of grain in Australia. Artists also convert them into stunning masterpieces that seek to make the landscape look beautiful. Silo art has become a tradition in the country, thus every year new artworks appear on the so-called Silo Art Trail, the largest outdoor gallery in the country. MWN

5 Fun things to do in Boston this weekend

Enjoy some bourbon and bacon, train for your marathon, and celebrate International Women's Day.

March is always a weird month in terms of Boston weather. Sometimes it's 60 degrees and sunny, sometimes it's 30 degrees and snowing. But after that storm on Monday, we're all anxious to get out in this weekend's 40-degree weather. Here is our guide to five fun things to do in Boston this weekend.

Bourbon and Bacon Fest

Ah, bourbon and bacon. What could be better? We won't go "bacon" your heart: There is a holy place to enjoy both this weekend. WAAF radio is hosting the Bourbon and Bacon Fest at The Castle at Park Plaza. Guests receive a free Bourbon and Bacon Fest glass to enjoy 10 samples of delicious bourbons. There is going to be live music, bourbon experts, chefs, a photo booth and more! B n' B snacks are going to be available to munch on, while your general admission ticket gives you access to 10 food samplings from restaurants present. If you want to have some memorabilia from this booze-and-meat-filled day, there will be official Bourbon and Bacon Fest Merchandise available for purchase! Guests must be 21 or older to attend. March 10, 2-4 p.m., The Castle at Park Plaza, 130 Columbus Ave., 21+, $60, boston.bourbonandbaconfest.com

100 Days Out – Boston Marathon training

Are you training for the Boston Marathon in April or any other spring race? Sometimes it's better to have a support group that pounds the pavement with us. 100 Days Out refers to the 100-day countdown until the race begins, and thus marks the first day of serious training. Organized by Trackhouse, 100 Days Out is hosting weekly supported Sunday morning long runs, including four course preview runs on the Boston Marathon route. In addition to group runs, there is going to be pre-run coffee and light snacks, access to lockers, bag check and stretching aids, support stations with water and a post-run breakfast in the Eliot Lounge. Marathon coaches will be on hand to answer any training-related questions, and there is a room with specialized equipment to help with recovery. March 10, 9 a.m.-noon, The Tracksmith Trackhouse, 285 Newbury St., tracksmith.com

Cambridge Winter Farmers Market

It's hard to be healthy when it's cold outside. All we want to do is snuggle in bed with some delicious carbs and send ourselves off into a carb-induced coma. Cambridge Winter Farmers Market is combating your winter bodies with healthy food choices that support you and local farmers. Every weekend, two dozen vendors gather at the Cambridge Community Center to bring vegetables, fruit, meat, fish, cheese, bread, eggs, pasta and sauces, jam, cookies, candy and even wine. This Saturday, the market is hosting bluegrass band The Incorrigibles to pick some tunes while you shop. March 9, 10 a.m.-2 p.m., Cambridge Community Center, 5 Callender St., Cambridge, cambridgewinterfarmersmarket.com

International Women's Day at MFA

It's true, March is an exciting month. We celebrate St. Patty's Day and Mardi Gras, but most importantly, International Women's Day. To help celebrate women, join the MFA as they honor the women who made the MFA. Do you know the story behind the women who created your favorite exhibit? How about your favorite painting? Or the women who impacted the MFA? There will be four pop-up exhibits on Women Donors, Women Artists, Contemporary Women Artists and Women Curators. March 8, Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., $23+, mfa.org

Free Film Fridays at Museum of Science

Thanks to the support of MathWorks, all shows in the Mugar Omni Theater on Fridays in March are free. You only need to pick up tickets at the museum box office on the day and enjoy your film! The films that are showing include "Cuba," "Great Barrier Reef" and "Volcanoes: The Fires of Creation." Tickets are on a first come, first served basis, so be sure to get there early! March 8, 1 Science Park, $23+, mos.org

R. Kelly denies sexual abuse charges, arrested hours later

R. Kelly. REUTERS

Pounding his chest for emphasis, Kelly shouted, "I didn't do this stuff!"

R&B singer R. Kelly was taken into custody on Wednesday after a court hearing in Chicago in which he was ordered to pay $161,663 in child support he owes, according to a Cook County Sheriff's spokesman.

Kelly was detained hours after CBS News aired an interview with the singer in which he lashed out against charges that he had sexually assaulted teenage girls.

Kelly, 52, pleaded not guilty in February to charges that he sexually assaulted three teenage girls and a woman in alleged incidents dating back to 1998, weeks after a Lifetime documentary leveled new accusations against him.

In his first interview since the indictment, "CBS This Morning" co-host Gayle King asked Kelly about allegations that he had sex with women under 18 and that he was physically and verbally abusive.

"Not true," the "I Believe I Can Fly" singer responded in a clip of the interview played on the CBS Evening News. King, who spoke to Kelly in Chicago, his hometown, then asked if he had held anyone against his will. "I don't need to. Why would I?" he said.

The singer grew angry and emotional as the interview went on, turning to make his argument directly to the camera. "That's stupid. Use your common sense," he said.

"Forget the blogs, forget how you feel about me," Kelly added. "Hate me if you want to, love me if you want. But just use your common sense. How stupid would it be for me, with my crazy past."

Pounding his chest for emphasis, Kelly shouted, "I didn't do this stuff!" His voice cracked and he broke into tears, saying: "This is not me! I'm fighting for my f—ng life!" The excerpt broadcast by CBS bleeped out the expletive while the transcript used an asterisk.

Kelly, whose real name is Robert Sylvester Kelly, could face up to seven years in prison for each of the 10 counts if convicted. REUTERS

Celebrity chef Mario Batali cuts ties with restaurants after abuse accusations

Celebrity chef and former television star Mario Batali sold his stakes in his U.S. restaurants on Wednesday, after accusations of sexual harassment caused him to be fired from a television cooking show and prompted a police investigation.

Batali has sold his shares in the 16-restaurant operation, including Babbo and Del Posto in New York, to former partners Tanya Bastianich Manuali and her brother, Joe Bastianich, he said.

"I have reached an agreement with Joe and no longer have any stake in the restaurants we built together. I wish him the best of luck in the future," Batali said in a statement from his representative, Risa Heller.

Batali has previously admitted and apologized for sexually harassing women but denied charges that he sexually assaulted a woman in 2005.

Since the start of the #MeToo movement, hundreds of women have publicly accused powerful men of sexual misconduct that was often overlooked by colleagues.

Batali's charisma and culinary flair turned him into a restaurant executive, television star, author and one of the world's most recognizable chefs. He premiered on Food Network in 1997 on the show "Molto Mario" and in 2011 helped launch "The Chew" on ABC.

Batali is in the process of selling a minority stake of Eataly USA, a luxury marketplace with six locations in the United States, Eataly spokesman Chris Giglio said in a statement. Heller did not respond to requests for comment on Batali's ownership of Eataly.

The New York Police Department launched an investigation after CBS "60 Minutes" reported in May 2018 that Batali drugged and sexually assaulted an employee in 2005. Batali at the time denied the report.

GETTY IMAGES

Police in January closed their investigation because detectives could not find enough evidence and the incident was past the state's statute of limitations, according to reports by local media.

Police did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

In December 2017, ABC Television Network fired Batali from its daytime cooking show "The Chew" after four unnamed women accused him of sexual misconduct that they said spanned at least two decades. The Food Network had also canceled plans to relaunch "Molto Mario."

In a previous statement, Batali apologized and admitted to those allegations, stating that the claims "match up with ways I have acted."

Emeril Lagasse will set sail with Carnival Cruise Line in 2020

The beloved New Orleans chef will "kick it up a notch" on the high seas with his brand-new restaurant Emeril's Bistro.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Yesterday afternoon, Carnival Cruise Line announced its brand-new cruise ship, the Mardi Gras, that will set sail in 2020. Paying homage to its very first boat, the TSS Mardi Gras, that set out on the high seas in 1972, the cruise will be a culmination of everything that guests have come to know and love from Carnival — and just a little bit more.

Over a private lunch in a tucked-away corner of New York City's Bell Book & Candle, the people at Carnival unveiled that Mardi Gras will be welcoming aboard none other than Emeril Lagasse to helm a brand-new a la carte restaurant onboard the ship for passengers looking for authentic New Orleans cooking. Because when you think of food from the Big Easy, who else comes to mind other than Mr. "BAM!" himself?

The restaurant, Emeril's Bistro, will sit directly in the middle of the ship's "French Quarter" zone and serve breakfast, lunch and dinner.

Along with an open seafood bar, main menu items will include oyster and cochon de lait po-boys, muffaletta sandwiches, Emeril's signature barbecue shrimp, fresh seafood ceviche, roasted duck & Andouille sausage gumbo, jambalaya and complements such as Creole potato salad with diced scallions and red beans and "jazz-man" rice. For breakfast, passengers will be able to indulge in the early hours with a shrimp and grits and a shrimp Creole omelet. To top off your meal, Big Easy classic Bananas Foster and lemon icebox pie will be waiting for you if you haven't already stuffed yourself with barbecue shrimp.

"It's been an incredible experience already working with the folks at Carnival," Lagasse says. "Not only the leaders but the culinary team and the chefs have been fabulous."

As far as challenges that may arise serving fresh seafood in the middle of a cruise, Lagasse believes where there is a will, there is a way.

"When I opened in Las Vegas 25 years ago, they thought I was absolutely insane to open a fish restaurant in the middle of the desert," laughs Lagasse. "Maybe it's not been done. Why not? Let's explore that. … I don't think these days there are any limitations. If you want Berkshire pork, there's no reason why we can't have Berkshire pork on the ship. That's what we're talking about with the seafood and oyster bar. We're not going to buy a bunch of frozen stuff. These guys, the culinary team at Carnival, think outside the box. If you want to have a hamachi crudo, we'll figure that out!"

This kind of spirit and drive is what initially made America fall in love with Emeril in the first place, and is what puts great faith into the people at Carnival to deliver some of his classic and world-renowned dishes.

Carnival Cruise Line and Emeril Lagasse Announcement Luncheon.

"People like to try different things," says Carnival Cruise Line President Christine Duffy. "We wanted this to be more about introducing people to the whole vibe that is New Orleans Cajun cooking that he does so well."

The Mardi Gras cruise will depart from Port Canaveral, Florida, and will have a variety of different destinations based upon the package you choose. The ship will also be the first cruise with a full roller coaster on board as well as many other forms of entertainment that will be announced in the upcoming months.

Climbing Mt. Everest just got a whole lot grosser (and it's a good thing)

Fodor's Travel

Colorful tents and Tibetan prayer flags at Everest Base Camp, Khumbu Region, Nepal. R.M. NUNES

To summit Mt. Everest is a notoriously difficult, expensive and dangerous endeavor that only a limited number of people are able to attempt in any given year. But even the world's tallest mountain isn't free from the all-too-common issue of littering. In fact, the litter situation on Everest is compounded by the fact that the harsh conditions make recovering trash its own Herculean task.

The litter that mars the pristine and dramatic beauty of Mt. Everest has been a source of concern for years now. In 2017, climbers on the Nepal side removed 25 tons of trash and 15 tons of human feces. "The peak has become a fecal time bomb," wrote Outside magazine senior editor Grayson Schaffer in a Washington Post op-ed from 2014. But now Chinese officials are taking new steps aimed at keeping that particular bomb from detonating.

One of those changes is that the base camp on the Tibetan side, which saw 40,000 visitors in 2015, will be closed indefinitely to tourists. (Climbers who have obtained a permit to summit the mountain are still allowed.) The closure will give a team of 200 people time and space to clear trash at base camp as well as higher elevations. Tourists willing to make the trek can still visit the base camp on the Nepalese side.

The second change is that climbers will now be required to carry out all of their waste. And not just bottles and cans, but waste of the human variety.

The announcements were recently made by Ci Luo, director of the Chinese Mountaineering Association. But these are just the latest developments in efforts to contend with the issue of what to do with all the trash that's been accumulating on Everest. Just over a month ago, China cut down on the number of permits it issues to prospective climbers to 300.

In 2014, Nepal started requiring climbers to pay a $4,000 garbage-disposal deposit that's refunded when climbers return with at least 18 pounds of trash, which you could easily accomplish with human waste alone. (According to Kim Barret, a professor of medicine at University of California San Diego, the average adult produces an average of 14 to 17 ounces of feces a day. So if it takes around two months to climb Everest that's roughly 50 pounds of waste.) But it's not just the unsightly nature of human waste. A 2012 survey of water sources near Gorak Shep, the lakebed where the waste from Everest's base camp is deposited, found that one of them failed to meet drinking water standards. The cold and the elevation keep the feces from degrading in a timely fashion and so it ends up getting barreled up and deposited in the lakebed. One potential answer was devised by Gary Porter, a retired engineer and climbing enthusiast, who is working to make bio-gas digesters that will convert the feces into methane gas. But because the digesters are difficult to operate at high altitudes, even this solution comes with its own puzzle.

But such measures requiring visitors to carry out their own excrement aren't new. Climbers that take on climbs at Mt. Rainier in Washington State and El Capitan in Yosemite, for example, are required to defecate into bags, which they then remove after their descent.

B's stay hot entering weekend swing

The B's continue to pull out points as they bolster their playoff spot.

RICHARD SLATE
sports@metro.us

Right now, everything is coming up Bruins.

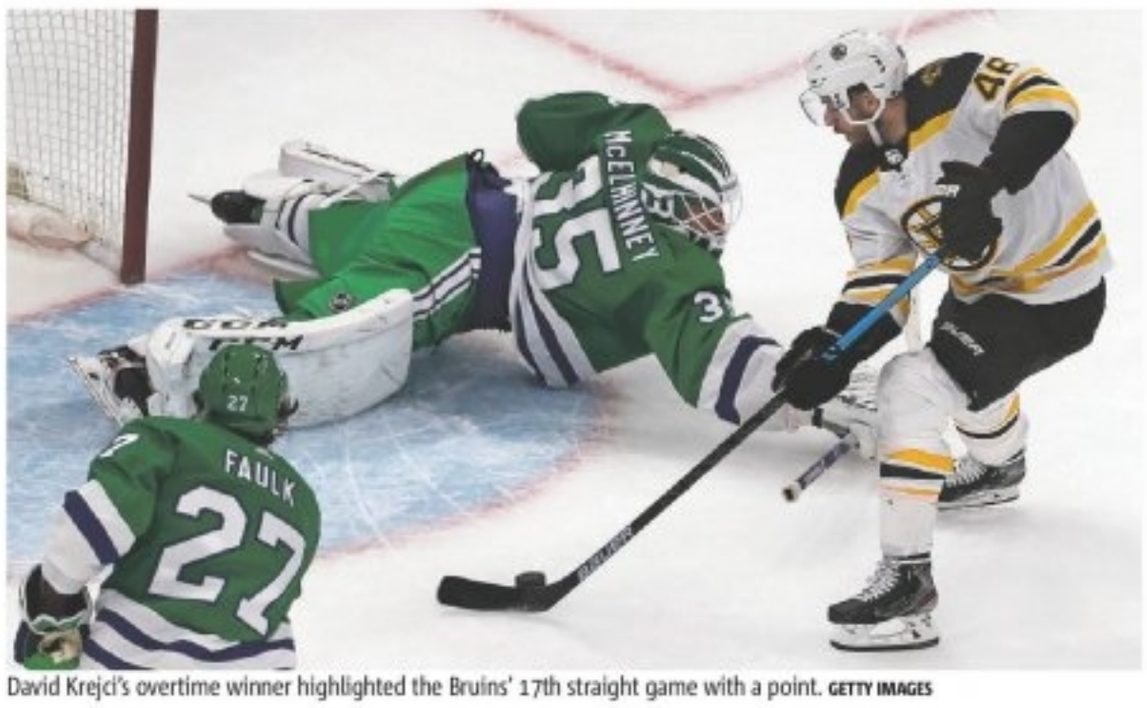
After Tuesday's thrilling 4-3 overtime win against the Carolina Hurricanes at TD Garden, Boston has two tilts left on its season-high six-game homestand. The B's have earned points in 17 straight games (13-0-4), which is tied for the third-longest such streak in franchise history.

With at least a point tonight (7, NESN) against the Florida Panthers, they would tie the second-best mark set on two separate occasions in 1968-69 and last season.

If they can also come up with a result on Saturday night against the lowly Ottawa Senators, they'll trail only the 23-game record from way back in 1940-41.

The top end of the Atlantic Division is the high-rent district of the NHL. It is the most competitive group when you talk about the Tampa Bay Lightning — the undisputed best team in the league — and the Toronto Maple Leafs, who would lead both the Metropolitan Division or Central Division if they resided there.

The Lightning have already lapped everyone and essentially clinched home ice throughout the playoffs, meaning that it's a dogfight between the Bruins and Maple Leafs once again, just like it was last spring. Each Original Six club has 16 contests remaining in the regular season, and with the Bruins only up three points on the Leafs with no more head-to-head matchups left, it ensures Boston is unlikely to take its foot off the gas even though they're tied with the Calgary Flames for the second-most points in the NHL.



David Krejci's overtime winner highlighted the Bruins' 17th straight game with a point. GETTY IMAGES

Digging out of a 2-0 hole isn't a perfect recipe for success, but the B's managed to erase that deficit against the Hurricanes, who had won five straight games heading into their meeting on Tuesday.

"We really battled back," noted head coach Bruce Cassidy. "I thought we were clearly the better team [after trailing 2-0], earned the right to get back into the game and then it's anybody's game. It was a bit of our B game and then a bit of our A game in spurts and it was enough in the end against a good team."

No matter which goaltender plays for Boston at the moment, they are both a good choice.

Tuukka Rask (22-8-5, 2.29 goals-against average, .922 save percentage) is riding a 17-game point streak of his own (14-0-3) and he should get the start against the Panthers.

Meanwhile, Jaroslav Halak (18-9-4, 2.31 GAA, .924 SV%) got the win against the Hurricanes with 34 saves. The nearly identical statistics allow Cassidy the luxury of balancing out their workloads rather than relying too much on Rask down the stretch, which is a bad trend that repeatedly killed the Bruins during the end of former head coach Claude Julien's regime.

Bruins star Brad Marchand reached 50 assists for the second straight season on Tuesday and he recognizes that this could be a special team.

"As a group, we want to compete and hold each other accountable. You can see right now that we have so much depth: Wags [Chris Wagner] gets the first one to get us going and then Jake [DeBrusk] gets a huge goal for us, so we just kind of roll from there. It's the depth of our group that's allowing us to win."

OPINION

DANNY PICARD
@DannyPicard

The Kyrie Irving Show took a strange turn on Tuesday night in Golden State.

Irving scored only 19 points in the Boston Celtics' 128-95 win over the Warriors, but it was evident that we were watching a different team than we had seen all season long. Whatever that was in Golden State on Tuesday, the Celtics need to keep it up.

Still, this team could go on to win 10 straight and something just wouldn't feel right. Because a tone has already been set for the 2018-19 Celtics. This is a team that has issues. This is a group that has egos. This is a group that has major sensitivity.

It's a group that's led by Irving. This is his team. Only, nobody's really sure if he wants this to be his team or not.

The elephant in the room is that Irving is out, he's leaving the Celtics as a free agent after this season, and that he's not really having fun with this group right now.

Maybe all of that's true. Maybe it's not. But Irving has created a fire that he continues to keep lit when he's talking with the media.

Take Monday, for example. Irving and the Celtics were preparing for Tuesday night's game against Golden State, and he decided that was a good time to talk about how much he hates the media.

"I didn't really come into this game to have cameras in my face, to be famous, be a celebrity, whatever embodies that," Irving told reporters. "So it's a little hard for me. I wanted those things when I was younger, but now, at this point in my career, I just want to play basketball at a very, very high level."

Irving is averaging 23 points and seven assists per game this season. He's one of the league's stars. But his constant attempt to gain sympathy for how bad he keeps telling us this season is nauseating.

"I get tired of all this stuff, just like everybody else," said Irving on Monday. "It's a constant battle because the media has gotten just outrageous. I just saw something the other day, it's just, he's the greatest player playing our game right now, but even seeing somebody question LeBron's body of work, my body of work, KD's body of work . . . nobody should ever question what type of winner those guys are."

It's a constant battle? Irving is making $20 million this season. This summer, he's expected to sign a max contract that will get him over $30 million per season. And his Celtics are pretty much guaranteed to make the playoffs as a top five seed.

What a battle. Poor guy. He has it so tough.

In reality, Irving got exactly what he wanted. He's the one who demanded a trade out of Cleveland. He's the one who wanted to be a leader of a team. He's got both, yet, he sounds like the most unhappy pro athlete to ever walk into Boston, a city that loves him — or at least, a city that once loved him when it seemed like he wanted to be here long-term.

After a win over Golden State, things should seem like they're about to take a turn for the better. But something still doesn't feel right.

All of Irving's previous media sessions don't just go away after a couple wins. We can't just delete all of his comments from our memory. And through it all, it seems like he's building his ultimate excuse to leave town: by blaming the media.

I hope he stays. I really do. But until I see him sign that contract, this season of The Kyrie Irving Show just won't feel right.
